Investment strategies as you approach retirement

It's usually a good idea to start reducing the risk of your pension fund as you approach retirement. But it's important to strike the right balance so you can continue to power the growth of your portfolio for many years to come as well as draw an income.

As we move through the different stages of life it's important that our investment strategies adapt. Typically, your financial goals change when you retire. You may want a regular reliable income, which usually means you have to take less risk when it comes to investing. People nearing retirement traditionally switch savings out of risky investments and into safer assets to protect their portfolios from market downturns.

Reduce risk in your portfolio as you near retirement

Managing your portfolio's risk level (the possibility of losing the money you invest) as you get older is important to ensure you meet your financial goals. Younger investors with longer timelines to retirement (typically 30 to 40 years) are generally encouraged to take more risk in their portfolios as if there are any market falls, they have longer to recover.

As you get older and approach retirement the more important it is to preserve the wealth you have accumulated. This is because as the timeline to retiring gets shorter, your portfolio has less time to recover in the event of a market decline.

So, it's a good idea to lower the level of risk to reduce the possibility of your investments falling in value. In most cases, this means reducing exposure to equities and increasing exposure to lower-risk investments that produce an income such as bonds to shield your investments from the ups and downs of the market.

Why it's important to diversify

Portfolio diversification is a way of reducing potential risks by spreading your investments across different assets, rather than having it concentrated in one place. By investing across different asset classes, companies, countries, and sectors, you can help reduce the impact of any major market swings on your portfolio.

While you can't eliminate all investment risk, diversification can help smooth out any fluctuations that happen over time. For instance, stocks can earn more money than other asset classes, but they tend to be more volatile. Therefore, most financial professionals agree that as you approach retirement it is best to reduce the allocation to equities in your portfolio.

Government bonds are less likely to lose money than stocks and are seen as a better bet for retirement thanks to their predictability and income-generating potential. Bond prices are also not affected by the same market conditions that move stock prices. By shifting their investments out of stocks and into bonds, people nearing retirement can lower their risk and enjoy greater financial stability.

Finding the right balance

It's always important to review your investments before any big life changes, which is particularly true if you are approaching retirement. With any decision about your investments, there are trade-offs. The greater the risk you are prepared to tolerate, the more potential there is for your investments to grow.

While reducing risk with bonds can help shield you from any downturns in the market, your returns could be lower. As you approach retirement, it's important to strike the right balance between assets reducing risk in your portfolio so you can continue to power its growth for many years to come as well as draw an income.

A financial adviser can help you build a well-diversified portfolio appropriate for your risk tolerance and investment goals and adapt it, so the strategy always reflects your age and circumstances.

The value of investments and any income from them can fall as well as rise and you may not get back the original amount invested.
